One hundred and and seventy men in all were buried by the explosion.

The bodies of seventy-eight dead have been recovered.

Nearly all of the rescued told the same story; they were at work in pockets off from the main passage swept by the blast when the explosion occurred, but were in darkness and hindered in their efforts to escape by debris.

The Mexican situation, topped by this latest development, was admitted in all quarters to be more critical than it has been at any time since Huerta precipitated the landing of troops at Vera Cruz.

Secretary Bryan had received today no word from the latest represents and hindered in their efforts to escape by debris.

Obregon's decrees in Mexico City and his threat to leave the capital unprotected with water and light plants out of commission and the atkilling. Bryan did not comment further to-day than to say that the Bome definite development was expected in diplomatic circles as the result of the decision of the corps of European representatives to leave the Mexican capital. Where the diplomatists would go was the subject of some speculation.

Without diplomatic representatives in Mexico City, the capital, a large portion of the distracted country would practically be cut off from the world and all foreigners be at the mercy of the factions.

Juan N. Amador, head of Carranga's agency here, to-day declared in a formal statement that reports of the gravity of the situation have been "grossly exaggerated." He declared Obregon would do nothing to "cause heedless suffering."
